TEXT ABOUT THE EXHIBITION:

The international exhibition of contemporary art titled Newrope is organized by the Nitra Gallery in collaboration with the International Theatre Festival Divadelná Nitra, whose 25th anniversary edition's theme is "Ode to Joy? (the past – the present – the future)".

Today's Europe faces many challenges such as the long-lasting refugee crisis, Brexit, terrorist threats, weakening economy, far-right growth and others. Slovakia has to deal with these factors not just internally, but also externally in cooperation with all EU nations, because during the Newrope exhibition Slovakia is presiding in the Council of the European Union. How do artists both from Slovakia and abroad reflect topics that relate to all of us?

Curator Omar Mirza has asked almost thirty artists and artistic groups from various European countries to comment on the current state of events. Besides older or newly adapted pieces, the focus of the exhibition is on new works created specifically for this occasion. The whole project is based on an open concept that evolves in time and space and on a free presentation of personal views and ideas.

Almost every type of artistic medium has found its way into the selection including drawing, painting, photography, sound art, video, sculpture, object, installation, happening, performance, participative art and interventions in public spaces. Besides the main premises of the Representative Halls in Nitra Gallery, visitors can also find artworks on Nitra's pedestrian zone. In addition, various events, screenings and installations will take place over the course of the International Theatre Festival Divadelná Nitra.

Newrope presents a wide spectrum of views and artistic strategies that vary from humorous and ironical approaches to more critical and political statements. A number of artists worked with the European anthem "Ode to Joy" and its interpretations in new contexts reflecting both current and possible future events. Is it even possible to sing odes to anything anymore?

Other artists were more interested in European symbols, the flag, our shared history, or in the search of one's place in today's world. Other themes that can be found at the exhibition include terrorism, the clash of cultures, refugees and migration, the concept of home, language barriers, politics, street riots or various utopian visions of a world after the collapse of our society that will be based on ecology, sustainability, independence and freedom from bureaucracy and state machinery.

The aim of the Newrope project is to present fresh views on the current European issues that differ from those served to us by politicians or mass media. Artistic views tend to be more diverse in both form and content. After all, Europe is also a union of diverse nations that have decided to live together. However, what will our future look like? Is there a new Europe – Newrope waiting ahead of us?
